Ready To Learn Summer Institute 2

July 29, 2004 and July 30, 2004

Educators spent two days exploring ways to better meet the irreducible needs of North Carolina's children. Participating educators:

Learned the importance of teaching media literacy to children.

Explored developmentally appropriate practices regarding children's environmental health issues such as lead poisoning prevention

Incorporated literacy and math into the science curriculum through hands-on activities

Investigated the needs for healthy child development.

Looked at how using sign language can improve communication and stimulate learning in the classroom.
